

Ability re: disability

If you're fortunate to have disability insurance, but unfortunate to need to use it, there are a few key points to keep in mind when gathering proof of your eligibility for benefits, presenting it and completing insurance claim paperwork.

The bottom line is, take a pro-active approach to documenting your inability to perform the substantial and material duties of your occupation, be truthful, and submit as much supportive detail as you can, regardless of how little space the insurer may give you on their official forms.

We thank policyholder attorney Alan Kassan for helping us convey the points in a creative way to make our guidance easy to digest:

If you're insured for disability through your work or individually here's advice, and some utility,
for when adversity hits:

The forms you get from your insurance Co.
may not let you share all facts that you know so don't hesitate to add pages to show, all the factual bits.

And also explain why you can't do your work
and anything else in your health that might lurk, and that none of your duties are you trying to shirk, hence you need benefits.

And talk to your Docs, and have them explain,
the reasons you suffer, the source of your pain,
and that they support you, simple and plain,
a fighter never quits.

Be forthright and thorough, add much detail, don't let their form format your story derail, and keep copies of everything you finally mail, this all will preserve your wits!

We thank Kantor & Kantor for their help crafting this edition of our Tip of the Month series.