

Most wildfire victims can get partial contents coverage without an inventory

Most wildfire victims can get partial contents coverage without an inventory

By Kathleen Pender

January 18, 2018 Updated: January 18, 2018 3:52pm

The information presented in this publication is for general informational purposes and is not a substitute for legal advice. If you have a specific legal issue or problem, United Policyholders recommends that you consult with an attorney. Guidance on hiring professional help can be found in the "Find Help" section of www.uphelp.org. United Policyholders does not sell insurance or certify, endorse or warrant any of the insurance products, vendors, or professionals identified on our website.

Source:

<https://uphelp.org/claim-guidance-publications/most-wildfire-victims-can-get-partial-contents-coverage-without-an-inventory/>

Date: April 5, 2025

Photo: Noah Berger, Special To The Chronicle. A wall stands at a home destroyed by the Tubbs fire in the Fountaingrove area of Santa Rosa. Most insurance companies have agreed to pay policyholders who suffered total losses in the California wildfires more than 25 percent of their contents limit without requiring them to submit a detailed inventory of items lost, according to the state Department of Insurance.

The information presented in this publication is for general informational purposes and is not a substitute for legal advice. If you have a specific legal issue or problem, United Policyholders recommends that you consult with an attorney. Guidance on hiring professional help can be found in the "Find Help" section of www.uphelp.org. United Policyholders does not sell insurance or certify, endorse or warrant any of the insurance products, vendors, or professionals identified on our website.

Source:

<https://uphelp.org/claim-guidance-publications/most-wildfire-victims-can-get-partial-contents-coverage-without-an-inventory/>

Date: April 5, 2025

Most insurance companies have agreed to pay policyholders who suffered total losses in the California wildfires more than 50 percent of their contents limit without requiring them to submit a detailed inventory of items lost, according to results of a survey by the Insurance Department released Thursday.

Normally insurance companies require customers who file a contents claim to submit a detailed inventory of every item they lost, including the approximate purchase date and original price. They generally require customers with replacement cost coverage to actually replace each item and provide a receipt if they want to collect its full replacement cost, rather than just its depreciated value. This can be a long and painful process.

On Oct. 13, while the Wine Country wildfires were still raging, Insurance Commissioner Dave Jones asked all insurance companies to voluntarily provide “a standard contents advance payment of at least 25 percent of policy limits for a total loss of the primary residence in a wildfire disaster.”

In a Dec. 21 notice, he asked all companies with total-loss claims “to follow the lead of other insurers who are providing up to 100 percent of contents (personal property) coverage limits without requiring the insured to undertake the onerous task of completing a detailed inventory.” He asked insurers to let his department know by Jan. 8 whether they would comply with the request. The department said companies representing 97 percent of the total-loss residential claims agreed to pay more than 25 percent of the contents limit without a detailed inventory. Thirty-four companies, including most of the state’s largest, agreed to pay at least 50 percent of contents without an itemized list. They include State Farm, Farmers/Foremost, CSAA Insurance, Nationwide/Allied, USAA, Allstate, Liberty Mutual/Safeco and Travelers.

It said 10 companies agreed to pay less than 50 percent or didn’t change their claims-handling policies, and three companies including Progressive did not respond to the request.

Allstate said it is providing “100 percent of an insured’s claim without requiring an inventory of personal property, provided that the policy is a personal lines policy with replacement cost coverage and the claim is a covered total loss,” unless fraud is suspected.

The information presented in this publication is for general informational purposes and is not a substitute for legal advice. If you have a specific legal issue or problem, United Policyholders recommends that you consult with an attorney. Guidance on hiring professional help can be found in the “Find Help” section of www.uphelp.org. United Policyholders does not sell insurance or certify, endorse or warrant any of the insurance products, vendors, or professionals identified on our website.

Source:

<https://uphelp.org/claim-guidance-publications/most-wildfire-victims-can-get-partial-contents-coverage-without-an-inventory/>

Date: April 5, 2025

Customers who get an advance representing less than 100 percent of their policy limit can still pursue the remaining amount if they submit an inventory and if necessary, replace lost items, said Janet Ruiz, a spokeswoman for the Insurance Information Institute, a trade group.

Nancy Kincaid, a spokeswoman for the insurance department, agreed that these amounts represent an advance, not a settlement of the claim.

Under a bill introduced in the state Legislature this month, SB897, insurers would have to offer policyholders, after a declared state of emergency, a settlement equal to at least 80 percent of their contents coverage without requiring them to submit a detailed inventory. This provision would apply to claims filed July 1, 2017, or later by homeowners and renters. This bill states that this settlement “shall release the insurer from any further indemnity for loss of contents related to the claim.”

Kathleen Pender is a San Francisco Chronicle columnist.

Email: kpender@sfchronicle.com Twitter: @kathpender

The information presented in this publication is for general informational purposes and is not a substitute for legal advice. If you have a specific legal issue or problem, United Policyholders recommends that you consult with an attorney. Guidance on hiring professional help can be found in the “Find Help” section of www.uphelp.org. United Policyholders does not sell insurance or certify, endorse or warrant any of the insurance products, vendors, or professionals identified on our website.

Source:

<https://uphelp.org/claim-guidance-publications/most-wildfire-victims-can-get-partial-contents-coverage-without-an-inventory/>

Date: April 5, 2025